

XM is outstanding radio with outstanding services. The competition feels threatened? It should. But it should respond by raising their operations to the standard that XM has provided instead of trying to fight to remain barely adequate.

It's a public market, if they want the public dollars then they should seek to provide the public with what they want.

XM does that.